1. As of 6 January 1952 the Chinese Communist Air Force Command had found the number of Air Force Guards (警卫) insufficient to cover the expanding installations of the air force and was expanding the Guards organization. According to formulated plans, the required men were to be drawn from various public security forces in North China and sent to Peiping and Kalgan for training.
2. On 6 January the Air Force Guards Division, controlled by the Peiping Air Force Command, was stationed at Peiping South and Peiping West Airfields. This force was to be increased to three divisions and to be stationed at airfields along railway lines in the North China Military Area.
